	inspired by contemporary music for his ballet pieces, and this is no exception:
	hints of hip-hop — languorous hip swivels and arms sweeping over heads — meld with graceful turns in toe shoes for a dance that is hypnotically beautiful."

	"Throughout the piece, the male dancers hold these poles, either vertically, horizontally, or at a tilt, with numerous variations of Ricci draped between them, wrapped around one, hanging by one knee, or even air-pedaling with the two poles under her arms. The choreography and Ricci's performance lend palpable weight to the yearning in the song."

	"Don't Fall for the disclaimer work in progress. "A Spektor of Things" Looked pretty polished at last weekend's Up Close, On Hope Show at Festival Ballet Providence. The Piece choreographed by Mark Harootian, is one of the nine in this two-hour show that ranges from good to very good, with emphasis on the latter. You see classical ballet, pop, jazz, and modern dance. In fact, you can see each style in one work "A Spektor of Things".
